Marilyn Cade is responsible for Internet and E-Commerce advocacy and policy issues, including intellectual property, Internet security, privacy, and content regulation, domestically and internationally. She also directs AT&T's advocacy activity on these issues with ad hoc organizations, professional organizations and associations. Her focus is the nexus of technology and public policy and implications for the Internet, online services, and electronic commerce.

In addition to advocacy and technology policy, her career with AT&T has included a number of management positions with AT&T's business units in sales, marketing, business operations and strategy. Prior to joining AT&T, she spent 9 years in a variety of non-profit organizations and state government positions.

AT&T is the world's premier voice and data communications company, serving more than 80 million customers, including consumers, businesses and governments. With annual revenues of more than $52 billion and some 140,000 employees, AT&T provides services to countries and territories around the world. The company is a leading provider of communications and IP services to businesses and is the nation's largest direct Internet Service Provider to consumers. AT&T's businesses are backed by the research and development capabilities of AT&T Labs, which is working to create the information services and communications networks of tomorrow.
